

FAIR SHARE

Fair share is the third ethic. This is often misunderstood; it is about sharing what you have in abundance with the earth, people and other creatures.

If you have too much of something it can become a burden to look after, so share it out, whether it be time, knowledge, entertainment, food or material things, without compromising the first two ethics.

As you walk into the third spiral, think about what you share out. Once you reach the centre and walk the outward spiral, think about what gets shared with you.

Thank you for walking the labyrinth.

Feedback is much appreciated... please tell us what you think?

Hope to see you again.

www.therekalibrator.co.uk

THE REKALIBRATOR

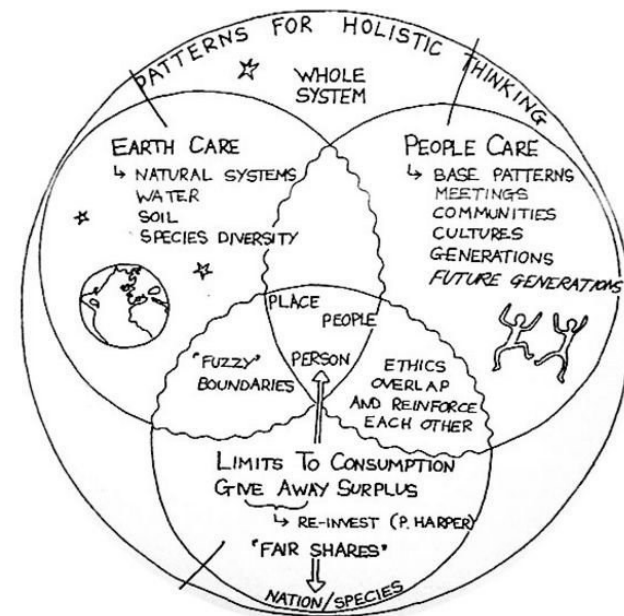

Labyrinths have been used in ancient civilisations as a tool to help people understand the world, the universe, nature and themselves.

This one was designed so that people can understand permaculture and how it would benefit you, along with everything around you, if adopted.

A labyrinth is not a maze, just one path to walk and contemplate life.

It is a personal thing; the more you put in, the more you will get out of it. It isn't a competition, take your time and become at ease with yourself.

When you are ready, walk to the first spiral; this is the first ethic and is called...

EARTH CARE

This is without doubt the number one ethic as it is our home. Is this lifestyle really the best we can do?

So, as you walk into the first spiral, you could think about what you do to take care of the earth, until you reach the centre; once you are at the centre and you start the outward path, you could think about how the earth cares for you.

PEOPLE CARE

This is the second ethic: because people are the most influential species in terms of shaping civilisation, so taking care of and supporting each other to become the best we can, makes perfect sense.

As you walk into the spiral, take time to think of all of the people you are in contact with and how you care about them.

Once you are in the centre and you start the outward path, think about the people who care about you.

If you would like to help or support The Rekalibrator, please leave any comments, feedback or reviews on our Facebook page

<https://www.facebook.com/TheRekalibrator/>